DISCOVERY MAY HELP SCIENTISTS COMBAT AIDS

New York (AP)

Scientists say they have found at least part of the reason why the AIDS virus targets a key immune system cell, and an expert on the disease says the discovery may someday help interfere with the infection process.

AIDS cripples the immune system by killing a certain kind of white blood cell, and the new research demonstrates that the suspected AIDS virus latches onto a particular protein on the surface of that cell to begin infection.

Dr. Robert Gallo, an AIDS expert at the National Cancer Institute in Bethesda, Md., said identifying the "receptor" protein for the virus was significant.

"If you know a lot about the receptor, it opens up ideas you didn't have before," he said Thursday. "You can start doing things that might interfere with the virus infection of the cell."

Robin Weiss, one of the British researchers who identified the receptor protein, said Thursday he won't make "large claims" for medicinal use of the discovery, but that "it does give us possible ideas."

DRUG APPEARS TO FIGHT AIDS

New York -

A drug investigated as an influenza treatment blocks the growth of the AIDS virus in the test tube, a new study has found, and researchers are preparing to test it in people who have the incurable disease.

Because the drug, called ribavirin, has already been studied in patients with other illnesses, the lengthy animal and human safety testing that often delays drug development has already been completed, meaning trials with AIDS patients could begin very soon, researchers said.

The report of ribavirin's effectiveness against AIDS appears in the current issue of The Lancet, a British medical journal.

Ribavirin is being studied as a possible flu treatment and is nearing approval by the Food and Drug Administration for use against respiratory syncytial virus infections, which interfere with breathing and can be fatal in infants.

Dr. Donald Forthal of the Center for Disease Control in Atlanta, where the research was done, emphasized that success in laboratory, or in-vitro, tests does not necessarily translate into success in patients.

Network Christmas Party

There wasn't a chimney but Santa Claus found a way to enter the Community Christmas Party held at Henri's on December 8, 1984. He brought presents for the party goers and listened intently to their Christmas wishes. A holiday mood was set with colorful balloons and decorations and singing carols around the piano.

Several Network members presented a "one of a kind" dance performance adapted (very adapted) from the Nutcracker Ballet. That, combined with a wonderful dinner and dancing was a great way to kick off the Holiday season; A joyful evening of friendship and fellowship, laughter and caring.

GAY MAYOR "UTOPIANIST AT HEART"

West Hollywood, Calif.

When she walks the streets of this newborn city, where the glitzy Sunset Strip mingles with plants-in-the window restaurants, Valerie Terrigno dreams of the future.

She speaks of planting trees, installing fountains and creating a safe and beautiful place for all its 36,000 residents, about one third of whom are gay.

Valerie Terrigno, 31, the newly selected mayor of newly incorporated West Hollywood, is a lesbian.

"You don't have to say avowed lesbian or admitted lesbian," she said. "I am a lesbian, I won't deny it."

She is believed to be the first lesbian mayor of an American city, and the importance of that, she said, can't be underestimated.

"We were illegal not too long ago," she said. "The first consenting adults bill wasn't proposed until 1968. Ten years ago I couldn't have been elected, and not because I was too young. We've come a long way in a very short time."

Ms. Terrigno, who received the most votes of any of 40 city council candidates, was named mayor by the other four council members. All five council members are paid $200 a month.

Last month's election also established West Hollywood as a new city.

In the first flush of victory, Ms. Terrigno stressed that West Hollywood would not be "a gay city," that every citizen group would be equally important.

But she conceded recently that those who predicted a "gay Camelot" may be right. She recalled the first meeting of the new city council, three of whom are gay, when a tough antidiscrimination law was adopted banning bias because of sexual preference.

"When people got up and cried when we adopted the ordinance, I realized that we had never had a place that was safe," she said. "We could still be fired from a job for being gay."

"Ideologically, cityhood was good for everyone. Emotionally, it was the most exciting thing that had ever happened for the gay community."

"I'm a utopianist at heart. I like having a place that's safe for everyone, where there's enough food and shelter for everyone."

The issue of shelter helped elect her. Some 80 percent of West Hollywood's residents are renters. About a quarter of the population is elderly.

West Hollywood, a two square mile area sandwiched between Beverly Hills and the Hollywood section of the city of Los Angeles, contains a diverse mix of structures: gleaming high-rises; quaint, but aging apartment buildings; classic California bungalows; chic new condos; trendy brick-and-greenery restaurants; sleek interior design boutiques; funky storefronts.

Born in the New York City borough of Queens, Ms. Terrigno, the eldest of five children, spent her childhood in the Bronx and later in Neptune, N.J. She majored in psychology at Hofstra University on Long Island, N.Y., then moved to California, where she did graduate work at UCLA.

By the time she was 18, she said, she knew she was a lesbian and told her Italian-American parents.

"Initially, they were shocked and upset," she recalled. "I think they were afraid I wouldn't be their daughter anymore. Once they realized I was the same person, it was OK."

LETTERS TO THE EDITORS

Dear Editors,

I picked up your classified form from the MCC and was very suprised. I'm glad to see that Colorado Springs, is finally going to get it's own newspaper and am looking forward to your first issue. You asked what I would like to see in a local newspaper so I'm going to tell you.

Articles written for women, by women, a monthly calander of sorts letting us know what is going to be happening in the area and national and local news.

I think youre classified section is something that has been needed around here for quite awhile. I believe that Gay money should go to Gay money and hope that people will take advantage of it.

Well, I wish you the best of luck and hope that you'll get the support from the community that you'll need to keep this venture going.

Sincerely, M.B.

LAUGH LINES

I'm tellin' ya, I'm discouraged. I've come to the conclusion the only way I'm going to have a young-looking body, is to wear a diaper.

TO YOUR HEALTH
FIGHTING THE BATTLE OF THE BULGE

By GLORIA LATIMER

Lots of people think the only way to lose weight is to go on a strict low calori diet. Not necessarily so! Those diets are hard to stick to and before you know it, you're back where you started. Research shows that one out of four Americans is overweight today. So if you're fighting the battle of the bulge, you're not alone.

But you don't have to be on a strict low calorie diet for weeks to lose weight. Here are some common sense approaches to weight control.

First, do it for yourself. Don't try to lose weight for your spouse, friends or for anyone else. Do it for yourself and make a personal commitment to it.

Second, there is one simple principle involved in weight reduction... in order to lose weight you must burn more calories than you eat and drink. Be aware of the number of calories you consume. Most adults need an average of 1,200 calories each day (a Burger King Whopper, french fries and soft drink total over 1000 calories). If you are very active you probably need more, if you are inactive you will need less.

Third, exercise can really make a difference. The adage, "use it or lose it" certainly applies here. The more you use your body the more efficient it becomes. You'll feel better and probably look better too! Physical activity burns calories so it will help you to lose those extra pounds.

Finally, avoid quick weight loss gimics. Many times such diets are potentially dangerous and they don't do much for helping you revamp your eating and exercise habits. Don't get on the diet see-saw where you go on a diet, lose some weight, go off the diet, gain some weight, go back on the diet, etc...

Be good to yourself! You deserve to be as happy and healthy as possible.

For free pamphlets on calorie expenditures and healthy diets or more information on this or other health concerns contact Gloria Latimer, El Paso County Health Department, 501 N. Foote Avenue, Colorado Springs, Colorado 80909. Telephone 578-3108

Between the Lines

Dear Bert, I have just recently come out of the closet at the age of 22. Drinking has never been very important to me and I'm still a little nervous about jumping into the bar scene in order to meet people. I'm not a very religious person and do not want to start attending services just so that I can meet someone either. Are there any other alternatives that I should be considering.

Thanks, Chuck

Dear Chuck,

Fortunately for you, Colorado Springs does have several other alternatives to offer. "Can We Talk" an open discussion group meets on Mondays, Colorado College Rap Group meets Thursdays between 7:30 and 9:00 and the Network meets the 1st and 3rd Mondays of each month. If you would like more information on these groups, call the HELPLINE at 471-4GAY and a volunteer will be happy to answer your questions. Coming out can be a difficult time for anyone and the bar scene isn't always the way to go. Take your time learning about your new lifestyle and take advantage of the groups being offered. Good Luck!

EXPERTS FEAR MEDICAL WORKER CAUGHT AIDS IN LAB ACCIDENT

Boston (AP)

A medical technician caught AIDS after accidentally pricking himself with a needle in a laboratory, and experts attempted Tuesday to learn whether he got the disease from on-the-job contact, a form of transmission never before documented.

The man fell ill several months after sticking himself with a needle while drawing blood, and Dr. George Grady, the state epidemiologist, estimated that there was a 50-50 chance that was how he caught the disease.

The possibility that lab and hospital workers might catch AIDS from patients has been a major concern since the epidemic began, and studies have shown that those people face little, if any, unusual risk.

The unidentified victim, who has been hospitalized for about a month, is in poor condition in the intensive care unit at the New England Medical Center.

AIDS, or acquired immune deficiency syndrome, is marked by the inability of the body's immune system to resist disease. The cause of the disorder is not known, but researchers have evidence it is caused by a virus discovered in France in 1983.

Anne Speakman, a hospital spokeswoman, quoted doctors as saying the man was not a homosexual, a needle drug abuser, a Haitian or a hemophiliac all groups considered to be at higher-than-usual risk of contracting the disease.

Grady said the married man worked in a lab where he drew blood from people who were likely to be drug addicts. He told doctors he stuck himself with a needle a few months before he became sick, but no one knows whether that needle had been used on an AIDS carrier.

AIDS has been spread through blood transfusions, but it's not clear whether the tiny amount on a used needle is enough to transmit the disease.

"It is a circumstantial case," Grady said, adding, "In the absence of a known stick from an AIDS patient or anybody who's a carrier, it's a guessing game but plausible. I think it's about 50-50."

Dr. Ken Castro, an epidemiologist with the Centers for Disease Control in Atlanta, was sent to Boston on Tuesday to investigate the case with city and state health officials.

Petra Langer of the Massachusetts Department of Public Health said they planned to interview the patient's physicians and probably his family members.

At the CDC, Dr. Harold Jaffe said, "We are trying to determine what is the most likely way this individual acquired AIDS."

Jaffe said that so far, 232 health care workers in the United States have gotten AIDS, and all but 23 of them belonged to high-risk groups.

"We've looked at those 23 in detail," he said, "and thus far we cannot show transmission through occupational exposure in any of them."

GAY GAY

By ROGER WEBB
Minister of
Pikes Peak MCC

It's an exciting privilege to be a contributing writer of our first local gay newspaper of sorts. The editors wanted to have a column devoted to people's personal life issues and concerns as a service to the readers. Having now been in the ministry within the gay community for five years, I hope to utilize some of that exposure to the heartaches and hopes of our people for this column.

Is something like this needed? You betchum! How many of you were brought up by your parents to be gay? Most, of us if not just about all, were given the "boy meets girl and lives happily everafter" routine. Let's look at that quoted assumption. We need to rethink what it means to be male and female in the 1980's (the old John Wayne and Anita Bryant/Doris Day), how do we meet each other and establish relationships, and painfully for many, when it doesn't last forever, how do we cope.

Not just gays but many straights are dancing as fast as they can keeping up with role changes. Moving from childhood scripting and certainties to adult ambiguities and questions confronts us all.

Who am I to be writing this type of column? Having counselled hundreds as a MCC minister this last five years, there's little I haven't heard and much I myself have lived. It would be my pleasure to be able to help you on your journey of creating your own positive gay lifestyle if only by prodding some thought processes within you. Let's begin this journey by understanding we were given little help in our formative years to be gay and we need to do it now as adults.

GAY HEALTH

It's quite likely that any sex education you had was heterosexually oriented or if related to Gay sexually transmitted disease was probably after you'd had an infection, and then was presented with thinly veiled contempt or moralistic lectures.

I'm not saying all that is behind us now or that no one is doing anything to make reliable sex education available. However, there is considerable variability in information from one source to the next, sometimes the result of one health professional's opinions, experience or interests and sometimes the result of incomplete information on the professional's part.

Fortunately, this country is leading the world with the number of good, Gay-run sexually transmitted disease (STD) services and education efforts are a major part of these services. Knowledge of specific Gay sexual activities, and the ability to be supportive of Gay sexual expression while discussing health education is to be effective. Therefore, competent Gay input into all sexually transmitted disease (STD) services is necessary for any education effort to work.

In order to take responsibility for one's choices regarding health, sexually active people must be well informed about: the signs and symptons of the STD's, the increased risk factors associated with various sexual practices, and what type of services to request in case there is not access to knowledgeable health providers. Information received from health professionals must be accurate and non-moralistic; facts should be labeled as facts, opinions should be labeled as opinions. Only in this way can Gay people be able to responsibly use the knowledge to alter their risks for disease acquisition and spread.

What follows is directed to the Gay male population. Exclusively Lesbian women have virtually no incidence of STD's. This long held impression was recently substantiated by a study in San Francisco.

These guidelines and recommendations are based on common sense, our current understanding about the occurrence and transmission of infections, and proven data. Occasionally they may represent what is thought to be a good idea but isn't proven. Therefore, they are subject to modification when new information becomes available.

Although this is not intended to serve as a self-diagnosis guide or a discussion of the specific infections we can acquire sexually, a brief definition of the main infections that will be mentioned follows:

Amebiasis, giardiasis: refers to bowel infection with parasites; usually cause diarrhea, gas, bloating, or alternating constipation/diarrhea; may not cause any symptons; difficult to diagnose and treat.

Shigella, Campylobacter: refers to bacterial bowel infections; usually quite severe with intense cramping, fever, bloody diarrhea.

Hepatitis A: used to be termed "infectious hepatitis."

Hepatitis B: used to be termed "serum hepatitis" and associated with needle (drug) use; now known to be sexually transmitted and of approximately 8 times higher prevalence in Gay men than straight.

Herpes: a viral infection which can cause recurrent ulcers in the external genital area or, if implanted inside the anal canal, can cause an intensely painful proctitis (rectal inflammation).

Gonorrhea: clap, drip: a bacterial infection which can be in the urethra (penis) where it usually causes symptons (drip, burning) or in the rectum where it usually does not cause symptons, or in the throat where it rarely causes symptons.

Non-gonococcal urethritis: refers to infection in the penis caused by organisms other than gonorrhea.

Non-gonococcal proctitis: refers to infection in the rectum caused by organisms other than gonorrhea.

Venereal warts: refers to warty growths caused by a virus and which may occur on the penis or more frequently in the warm moist environment of the anus and rectum.

Syphilis; a bacterial infection very common in Gay men; begins as a sore which can be anyplace but usually in the mouth, on the penis, the anus or in the rectum: can cause rash and flu-like symptons.

One very important fact to understand is that for virtually every STD there are asymptomatic carriers-those who have an infection and are transmitting it to their partners, but who have no symptons themselves.

PLANTS TO RELAX BY

By Bert Denby

Foliage plants help us relax at our meals and with each other! A restful atmosphere can be created with plants; it's a very practical and attractive way of encouraging us to slow down and relax. In this fast paced world we live in, it's important for us to enjoy mealtimes in a peaceful atmosphere... and plants can do just that. When entertaining, foliage plants lend a tone of elegance and gracious living; they soften a setting by blending the components together.

When selecting plants for eating areas think gracious and elegant. Avoid the spiny harshness of cacti (which would make a better conversation piece in another part of your home). Think about traffic areas and make sure they don't become obstacles and get bumped. Beautiful hanging plants above the "action areas" are excellent solutions! Consider the mood of your dining area; the tropical beauty of palms may be just right for your decor, especially if light levels will be low to medium. (See low light plants below.)

Plants in your kitchen area? Try a pot of chives on the window sill or one of many herbs! Since one can spend many hours in the Cooks Kingdom why not make it comfortable with greenery? It's a practical area for foliage plants too, since the kitchen is often a high humidity area which many plants love.

Be cautious about placing your plants anywhere extremes of heat or cold will harm them. Areas too close to the stove or where cooking gases may overwhelm them. Plant care can be easy; watch for tips in the coming issues.

Should you have an area which receives a limited amount of light consider these plants:

Delta Maidenhair Fern	60 to 85 degrees
Chinese Evergreen	60 to 85 degrees
Purple Waffle Plant	60 to 85 degrees
Peace Lilly, White Flag	60 to 85 degrees
Rochford Holly Fern	55 to 70 degrees
Mother Fern, Mother Spleenwort	55 to 70 degrees

The plant column will be a regular feature in the SOURCE. If you have any questions on plant selection or care, write to the SOURCE, P.O. Box 212, 3624 Citadel Drive North, Colorado Springs, CO, 80909.

COMMUNITY REPORT

The Community Report column will be a regular feature in the SOURCE. If you are connected with any gay group or organization in the Colorado Springs or Pueblo area and would like to have an article printed, contact Harry or Dan at 636-1060. This months article was written by Alan Wakefield, coordinator of THE GAY HELPLINE.

When I was asked by the founders of this paper to write an article, I expressed it's not one of my better talents but that I would be happy to give it a try.

The Pikes Peak Gay Community Center set up the HELPLINE in November of 1979. It was based out of an answering service which would transfer messages into the volunteer's home. Five years later we have a large community center with a very resourceful library. The HELPLINE has it's own office which is chaired by a handful of very caring volunteers.

The HELPLINE coordinators position became available several months ago. Sher, who was in the first training class 5 years ago and worked her way up to coordinator, resigned. Many thanks to Sher for a job well done. Upon being elected to the chair, I made some commitments to myself and so far have kept them all.

The HELPLINE is a very necessary part of our Gay community and has helped many people (some of whom have been very special to me) and this is where I get the incentive to keep it strong and effective. There is definitely room for growth. Presently there are only enough volunteers to keep the phones open on a limited basis. I would like to see more people get involved in the volunteer program so the hours the phones are live could be extended. The qualifications we look for in a volunteer are: a need to get involved, responsibility (being there when needed) and caring enough about your brothers and sisters to help them.

If you ever need the HELPLINE, feel free to give us a call at 471-4GAY. Also feel free to call back and let us know how you are doing.
